

I think it is disgusting that the FCC is lifting this ban because the great Mr. Powell is bending to the pressure of rich fatcats instead of the people. But who really expected more, right? Why in the world should Mr. Powell, a person with the capacity to do so much good in this world, actually represent the people and the public of America? I don't expect that much from him. I think the ban is one of the last vestiges of regulation that should be kept alive, to ensure that one business eventually does not rule the media - perhaps like the very fascist democracies Powell rallies against?
